Scope and Content

Julius J. Spohn was born in Newark in 1941. Some of the photos in this collection are black and white images he took during his childhood in the West Ward. After graduating from St. James High School in Newark in 1960, he lived outside of Newark for many years.

After returning to live in Newark in 2002, he began taking photos across the city. Most of the color photos in the collection were images taken by Spohn between 2002 and 2009.

The two photocopied publications in the half Hollinger box are Memories of St. Antoninus [n.d.], and Monastery of St. Dominic (2004?). Spohn has added personal material to both publications.

Processing Note

This collection has received minimal processing. The scrapbooks were left the way they were received, and placed on the shelf with Spohn's labeling intact. The two publications he donated were placed in archival folders and put into a document box.

Biographical Note

Julius John Francis Spohn was born at St. Michael's Hospital in Newark in November 1941. He is the only child of Julius Herman Spohn and Helen Irene Tighe Spohn, both of whom were also born in Newark. His great grandfather, Owen Carlin, an Irish immigrant, became one of Newark's first police officers in 1850. His grandfather, John T. Tighe, and his uncle, John C. Tighe, also served as city police officers. His mother and two of his aunts worked for the Prudential Insurance Company in Newark from the 1920s to the 1960s.

He was raised in the West Ward, on South Orange Avenue and South 12th Street. He attended St. Antoninus Parochial Grammar School from 1948 to 1956, and St. James High School in the East Ward from 1956 to 1960. He was the president of the senior class at St. James, and established the school's camera club. He graduated from Rutgers University-Newark in 1977 with a BA in Economics.

Spohn developed an interest in photography as a child. He had a darkroom in the basement of his house, and took pictures of his family and friends. He was the yearbook photographer during his senior year at St. James High School. Many of the photos he took of the neighborhood where he grew up are in the scrapbooks that focus on the West Ward.

After high school, Spohn joined the U.S. Marine Corps. He was a bodyguard for President John F. Kennedy during his trip to Mexico City in 1962. He served as a Marine Security Guard at the American Embassy in Seoul, Korea from 1962 to 1965.

When he returned home to Newark after discharge from the Marine Corps in 1967, he worked for National Newark & Essex Bank at 744 Broad Street as a securities trader from 1967 to 1970. He worked as a securities trader in Manhattan for Merrill Lynch and several other brokerage firms from 1970 to 1990. For several years in the mid 1980's, he published a monthly financial newsletter geared toward the LGBTQ community.

In 1990, after losing several friends to AIDS, Spohn left Wall Street and put himself through nursing school. He worked at veterans hospitals in Manhattan, East Orange, and Richmond, Virginia. He retired from nursing in 2015.

After the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, he returned home to Newark, and settled in the North Ward. Since then, he has taken photos across all wards of Newark, many of which are included in the scrapbooks in this collection.

He took photos and wrote articles for the Old Newark website. In 2007, he contributed material to an exhibit on the Irish in Newark and New Jersey that was organized by The Newark Public Library. Over the years, he has worked with the Newark Preservation and Landmarks Committee to have several of Newark's monuments restored, including the "Founders Monument" in Fairmount Cemetery and the "Indian Trails" monument, due to be installed near the Essex County Court House soon.

Spohn is retired today, but remains active. He still takes photos, and contributes articles to various publications. He regularly attends events of the Newark History Society and other organizations in the city.
